FORWARD

The Finke/Fink-Family Descendant List presented here extends backward into the Finke ancestral past as far as documentation was found, and forward to the present (August 2007). Essentially, the juncture of the miniscule ancestral portion and the road to the present begins with Christian and Christiane (Louise) Jäger Finke.

The primary credit line of this Finke/Fink story belongs to the authors' matriarchal great great grandmother, Christiane (Louise) Jäger Finke. When her husband Christian died in 1850, Louise set her sights on America - and never looked back. All seven children and the one granddaughter were to come. Everyone. Even the crippled Charlotte. None would be left behind.

Some family stories indicate that the oldest son Frederick was the driving force for emigration. He had been in the army. Soldiers jumbled together from all across the country certainly were talking of the promised-land in America. Germans - individuals and families - were leaving the homeland in droves during that period. Frederick most likely came back from the Army with an adventurous spirit, and the resolve to make his dream of life in America come true. The untimely death of his father provided the ready means for the great adventure.

Arriving at consensus for leaving probably was easy. None of the adults (19 or older) were married. If the family stayed, the business probably would either go immediately or eventually to Frederick. The rest would be disinherited. That was the way the system worked then. If Frederick didn't want to manage the business, but wanted instead to gamble on America, and was willing to help his mother keep the family together, then the rest of the family would recognize that America was their best option.

Much preparation was required. First and foremost, the business had to be sold. Money from it would pay for passage, and hopefully provide a nest egg for the start in America. If there was a home, aside from the business, it too must be sold. Personals had to be sorted (probably time and time again - paring down and paring down). Only essentials could be taken, everything else must be disposed of - maybe in one great "yard-sale". How painful that must have been - for everyone. Special care had to be taken when sorting the cookware; choices there were life-dependant.

There were essentials to buy: certainly enough food for the nine for the six-week passage, and a short list of items deemed unobtainable in America. All this stuff had to be carefully packed into trunks and casks. Fortunately, one business sideline of the Finke family was the manufacture of casks. The number allowed on board ship was probably fixed: so many per person, and whatever else one was willing and able to pay for.

Typically the German government demanded plenty of paperwork permitting its citizenry to emigrate. They documented everything - and preserved it. We found some of this documentation.

The most difficult of all must have been the sad good-byes. All knew they were final; there would be no coming back. Some stories say there was an occasional letter sent back to the homeland - mainly to encourage friends and neighbors left behind to come too, to be part of this great adventure. No correspondence in either direction was found.

Documentation tells us the family left their hometown of Wetterburg, Waldeck, Germany on 11 Mar 1854, and set sail from Bremen Harbor on 18 Mar 1854. The trip to America took six and a half weeks. It was not a luxury cruise. They landed in New York Harbor on 3 May 1854.

The family, rather hastily, purchased a small acreage near Darien, New York, and started farming. Two years was sufficient time for them to realize that they had been scammed. Welcome to America. They picked up what they could, and moved West.

This Descendant List shows that seven of the Finke-Family moved to Freeborn County, Minnesota, and two members moved to Livingston County, Missouri. With time, their descendants spread across this great country, filling every corner. A few became expatriates; others seem to have acquired dual citizenships.

It's a grand story. We, the compilers, have been deeply blessed in the joyful task of putting it all together. This Descendant List is only the bare bones of the story. Father-time permitting, a detailed Narrative Report will be forthcoming for each of the nine Finke family members who immigrated to America in 1854.

The nine Finke-family emigrants (denoted here by their preferred given names), and their respective ages on 18 Mar 1854, the day they set sail for America, were: Mother Louise Jäger Finke (50); and her seven children: Louise (28) (and her child Marie Elise Finke (3)), Frederick (26), Marie (21), Caroline (19), Christian Jr. (15), Henry (AKA Carl Henry)(12), and the crippled child Charlotte (11). God speed. Be fruitful and multiply.

Finally, we the authors admit that not every name, date and place entered in this Descendant List is unequivocally documented. A cursory glance reveals that some Finke-family branches are better documented than others. Even with identical effort, some fruit is easy pickin, while much will remain forever out of reach. No genealogical treatise we've ever examined was free of simple errors and faulty or conflicting data. All, including this one, would have benefited from another edit or two - and a few more years of research. Unfortunately, any author who is 70 going on 90 has forfeited such luxuries.
